Welcome

Welcome to your 7-Day Flexibility & Calm Yoga Reset—a gentle yet powerful journey designed specifically for beginners and those with stiff, tense bodies. Over the next week, you'll discover how just 15-20 minutes of mindful movement each day can unlock greater flexibility, melt away stress, and cultivate a deep sense of inner peace. This isn't about perfect poses or advanced flexibility—it's about meeting your body exactly where it is today and nurturing positive change from within.

Day 1: Foundation & Breath Awareness

Your yoga journey begins with establishing a strong foundation and connecting with your breath. Today's 15-minute session focuses on basic poses that gently awaken your body while teaching you the fundamental breathing techniques that will guide you through the entire week. Start in a comfortable seated position, either cross-legged on a cushion or in a chair with feet flat on the floor. Begin with 5 minutes of diaphragmatic breathing—place one hand on your chest and one on your belly, ensuring the belly hand rises more than the chest hand with each inhale. This activates your parasympathetic nervous system, immediately beginning the calming process. Move into Cat-Cow stretches on hands and knees, spending 8-10 slow repetitions to warm your spine. For those with wrist sensitivity, perform this on forearms instead. Transition to Child's Pose for 2 minutes, using a pillow between your calves and thighs if your hips feel tight. End with gentle neck rolls and shoulder shrugs in Easy Pose. Throughout each movement, maintain steady breath—inhale to expand and open, exhale to fold and release. Remember that your breath is your guide today. If you find yourself holding your breath, it's a signal to ease up and find a more comfortable variation. The goal is to establish a rhythm between breath and movement that feels sustainable and soothing. Track your starting flexibility by noting how your body feels in each pose—this baseline will help you appreciate your progress throughout the week.

- Use props liberally—blocks, pillows, and blankets are your friends, not crutches
 - Set up your practice space the night before to eliminate morning barriers
 - If sitting cross-legged is uncomfortable, sit on a folded blanket or cushion to elevate your hips

Day 2: Hip Opening & Lower Body Release

Day 2 targets the areas where most people hold the greatest tension—the hips, hamstrings, and lower back. These areas are interconnected, so opening one will positively affect the others. Begin with the same breathing foundation from Day 1, then move into a warm-up sequence of gentle hip circles while seated. Perform 5 circles in each direction, noticing any areas of restriction without forcing movement. The main sequence includes supported Butterfly Pose (sitting with soles of feet together—use blocks or pillows under knees if there's strain), Figure-4 stretch (lying on your back), and a modified Pigeon Pose using a chair or bolster. Each pose should be held for 1-2 minutes with steady breathing.

For Butterfly Pose, sit tall first, then slowly fold forward only as far as comfortable—the stretch should feel like a gentle pull, never sharp or painful. Incorporate gentle twists while seated, placing your right hand behind you and left hand on your right knee, breathing deeply for 30 seconds each side. These twists massage your internal organs while releasing tension in your spine. End this 18-minute session with Happy Baby Pose, lying on your back and gently rocking side to side. This playful pose relieves lower back tension while opening your hips in a supported way.

- Never force hip opening poses—they require patience and consistency rather than intensity
 - Use a strap around your feet for seated forward folds if you can't reach comfortably
 - If Figure-4 is too intense, keep the foot on the floor and just let the knee fall to the side

Day 3: Heart Opening & Upper Body Freedom

Modern life creates a forward-hunched posture from desk work, driving, and phone use. Day 3 counteracts this pattern with gentle heart-opening poses that expand your chest, strengthen your back, and create emotional release. Start with shoulder rolls and arm circles to prepare your upper body, then move to the wall for supported Chest Stretch—place your forearm against the wall and gently step your opposite foot forward, feeling the stretch across your chest and front shoulder. The main sequence includes Camel Pose modification (sitting on your heels with hands on lower back, gently arching), supported Fish Pose using a bolster or rolled blanket under your shoulder blades, and gentle Cobra Pose lying on your stomach. Each heart opener should feel like a natural expansion rather than a forced arch. In Fish Pose, stay for 3-4 minutes, allowing gravity to naturally open your chest while you breathe deeply. Incorporate Eagle Arms while seated to stretch between your shoulder blades—wrap your right arm under your left, bringing palms together if possible, and gently lift your elbows while dropping your shoulders. Hold for 45 seconds each side. Conclude with Thread the Needle pose from hands and knees, threading your right arm under your left and resting on your right shoulder and ear, creating a gentle twist that releases upper back tension.

- Start heart openers slowly—emotional release is common as you open areas where stress is stored
 - Place a block between your shoulder blades in Fish Pose for a more supported version
 - If Camel Pose feels too intense, simply sit tall and place hands on your heart, focusing on lifting your chest

Day 4: Balance & Core Integration

Midweek brings focus to your center—both physical core strength and energetic balance. Day 4 integrates gentle strengthening with stability work, building the foundation for more advanced poses while improving your overall body awareness. Begin with Mountain Pose, feeling your feet rooted while the crown of your head reaches skyward. This seemingly simple pose teaches the fundamental principle of grounding and lifting that applies to all yoga poses. Move through a slow, mindful sequence of Tree Pose modifications—start with toe on the ground and heel against your ankle, progressing to foot on calf (never on the side of your knee) if you feel stable. Hold each side for 45 seconds, using a wall for support as needed. The goal isn't to achieve perfect balance but to notice how your body makes micro-adjustments to maintain equilibrium. Incorporate gentle core work with Bridge Pose, holding for 30 seconds while breathing steadily. From Bridge, practice slow lowering and lifting to build strength gradually. Add Boat Pose modification with bent knees and hands supporting your thighs, focusing on lifting your chest rather than forcing straight legs. These poses build the deep core stability necessary for both physical health and emotional grounding. End with gentle spinal twists to integrate the work you've done.

- Use wall support for all balance poses—stability comes with practice, not forcing
 - In Boat Pose, a strong back is more important than straight legs
 - Practice balance poses at the same time each day when your energy is consistent

Day 5: Full Body Flow & Integration

Day 5 brings together all the elements you've learned, creating your first flowing sequence that integrates flexibility, strength, and breath awareness. This 20-minute practice moves through a gentle vinyasa that connects your breath to movement, creating a moving meditation that calms your nervous system while improving circulation and flexibility. Begin with 3 rounds of Sun Salutation modifications, moving slowly and honoring your body's current abilities. Start in Mountain Pose, sweep arms up on an inhale, fold forward on an exhale (bending knees as needed), step back to hands and knees, lower to your belly, press up to Cobra, push back to hands and knees, then to Child's Pose before slowly rolling up to standing. Each movement should take 4-5 seconds, synchronized with your breath. The integration sequence includes Warrior I with a gentle backbend, Wide-Legged Forward Fold with side-to-side swaying, and a seated spinal wave that combines all the spinal movements you've learned. In Warrior I, focus on the opposition of grounding through your feet while lifting through your crown—this creates space in your entire body while building strength and flexibility simultaneously. Hold each pose for 5-8 breaths, maintaining the steady rhythm you've developed over the past four days.

- Move at 50% of your maximum range—flowing yoga requires space for breath and stability
- If the flow feels too fast, pause in Child's Pose between any poses

→ Focus on smooth transitions rather than perfect poses—the movement between poses is where integration happens

Day 6: Deep Restoration & Stress Release

After five days of building strength and flexibility, Day 6 focuses entirely on restoration and nervous system reset. This 18-minute practice uses longer-held, deeply supported poses that activate your parasympathetic nervous system, promoting healing and integration of all your previous work. Today is about receiving rather than achieving, allowing your body to absorb the benefits of your consistent practice. Begin with a 5-minute Legs-Up-the-Wall pose (or legs on a couch), placing a folded blanket under your lower back and an eye pillow over your eyes if available. This inversion naturally calms your nervous system while reducing swelling in your legs and feet. Follow with supported Supta Baddha Konasana (lying butterfly) using pillows under each knee and a blanket over your body, staying for 6-8 minutes while practicing belly breathing. The session includes a supported twist sequence using bolsters or pillows, lying on your side with your top knee bent and supported. These gentle twists massage your spine and internal organs while releasing deep-held tension. End with a full-body progressive relaxation in Savasana, systematically releasing tension from your toes to your head. This final relaxation integrates all the physical and mental benefits of your week-long practice while teaching you how to consciously relax your body.

- Use more props than you think you need—restoration is about complete support and ease
 - Stay in each pose longer than feels necessary—deep relaxation takes time to occur
 - If your mind is busy during restorative poses, count your breaths or repeat a simple word like 'peace'

Day 7: Celebration & Future Foundation

Your final day combines celebration of your progress with establishing practices for ongoing growth. This 20-minute session revisits poses from throughout the week, allowing you to notice improvements in flexibility, strength, and mental calm. Begin by returning to the breathing exercise from Day 1, observing how your breath capacity and awareness have developed over the week. Move through a greatest-hits sequence that includes your most successful poses from each day, holding them slightly longer to appreciate your increased range of motion and comfort. Notice how poses that felt challenging on Day 1 now feel more accessible. Include a few poses that still feel difficult—these become your homework for future practice, showing you exactly where to focus your continued growth. The session concludes with a gratitude meditation in Easy Pose, reflecting on the commitment you've made to your wellbeing and the positive changes you've experienced. Set an intention for maintaining your practice, even if it's just 5-10 minutes several times per week. The goal is consistency rather than intensity—small, regular practices create lasting transformation while daily marathon sessions often lead to burnout and discontinuation of practice.

- Take before and after photos in a few key poses to visually appreciate your progress
 - Schedule your next week of yoga sessions now while motivation is high
 - Choose 3-5 favorite poses from the week to practice on busy days when time is limited

■ Bonus Tip

Create a 'Yoga SOS Kit' of 3 poses from this week that made you feel most calm and centered. Practice these any time you feel stressed, overwhelmed, or physically tense—they're your personal reset button that you can use anywhere, anytime, in just 3-5 minutes.
